A little sneak-peak from my art gallery :)

Being selectively social/ ambivert is a choice. And i do not try to hide it. From being loud with the close ones to being quite and shy with the others, its like going from a Harley Quinn to Barbie.

I feel at ease with my body language and confident in my actions when I feel involved, pleased and safe with others.

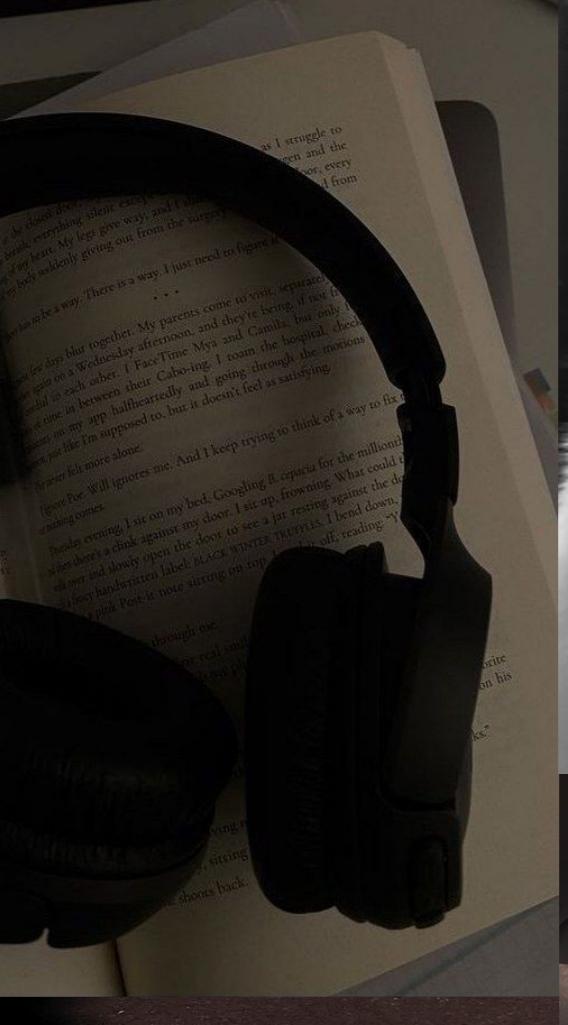

I made a vow to live by the motto "No regrets" and i do believe in forgiveness.

But occasionally I act rashly and allow my rage to control me.

I cut off randomly when i feel their energy is disturbing mine.

And I don't hold grudges, but when I do, they last a lifetime.

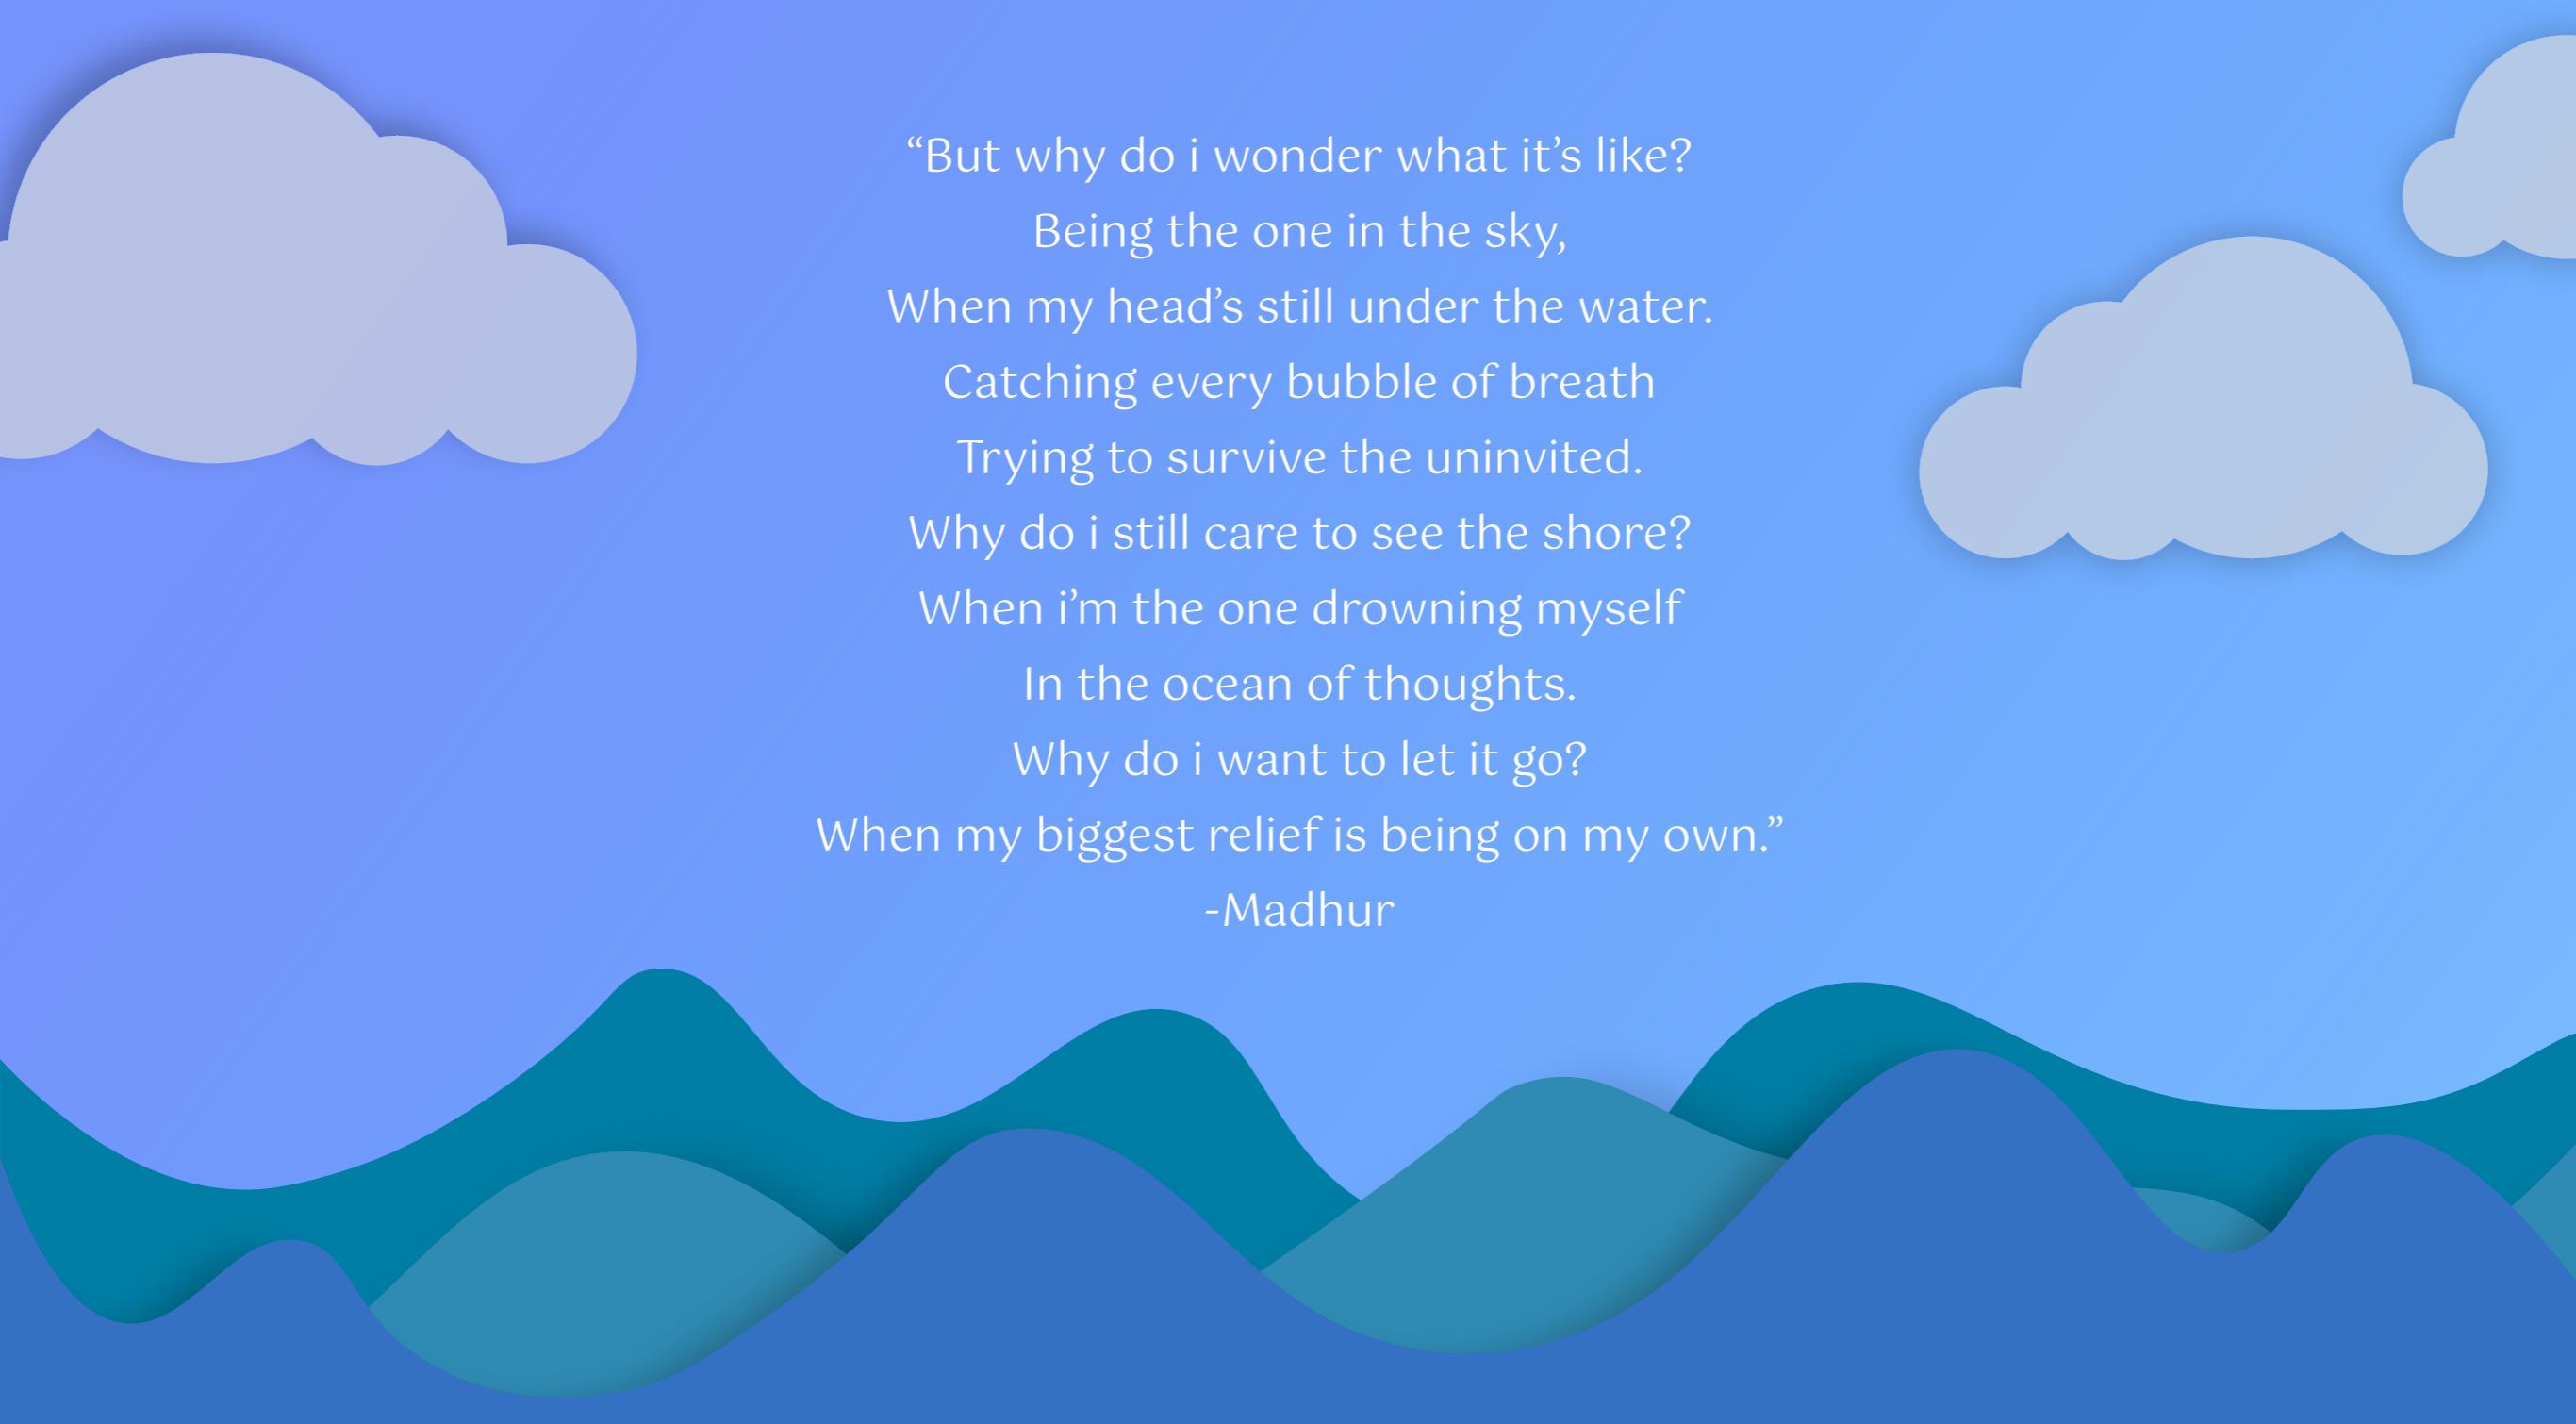

‘Adulting’ is a stage where you are still a kid but you are expected to be a grown up. Our elders try to justify our emotions in ways as if they are normal.

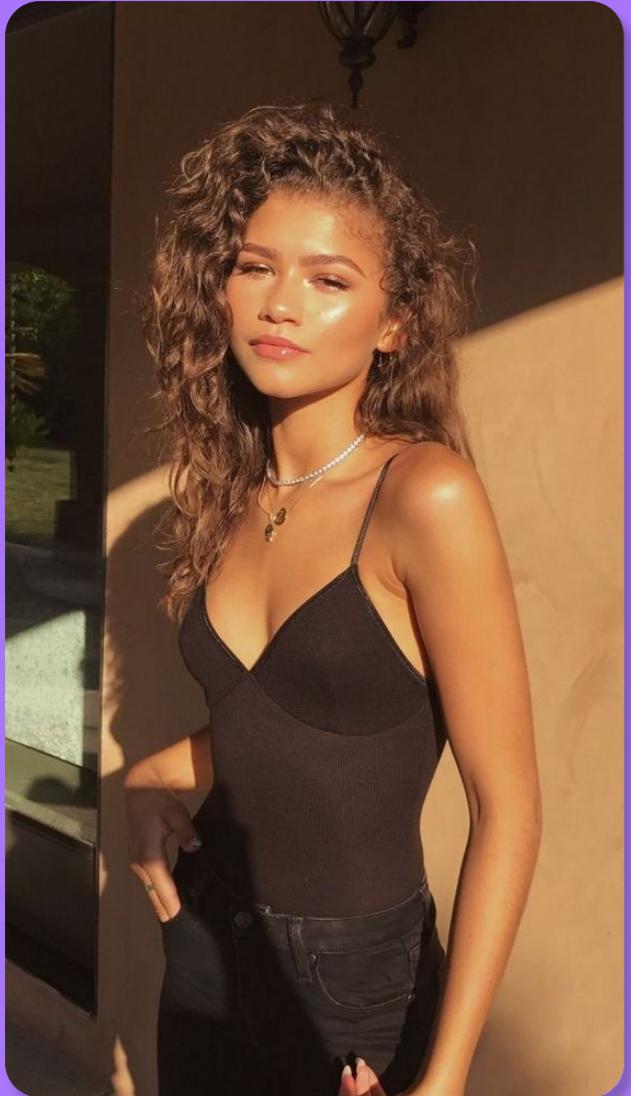

- I found a name for all my stage fears and lack of confidence recently. They call it ‘Anxiety’.
- I believe in fate. I have read a lot about it in books that’s why i hold my hopes up high.
- I try to justify someone’s actions myself when they do me wrong. And then comes the overthinking which works as a fuel in fire.

“But why do i wonder what it's like?
Being the one in the sky,
When my head's still under the water.
Catching every bubble of breath
Trying to survive the uninvited.
Why do i still care to see the shore?
When i'm the one drowning myself
In the ocean of thoughts.
Why do i want to let it go?
When my biggest relief is being on my own.”

Zendaya

I think Zendaya is the only person i wish i was like. I am impressed by how she carries herself and how she fits in with every role she is given.

Her way of being present and an all rounder is what I admire the most.

If someone asks me how a person should be presentable, it's her! I want her confidence, sense of fashion, respect for others, talent for acting, beautiful voice and loud personality. A person like her, who stands out without even trying.

If i were to change something about my personality,
it would be the anger issues and lack of self love.

There is nothing particular that i can or should blame for what i am am dealing with today.

Thanks for watching
